

Eugenie Harvey

Eugenie Harvey studied communications at the University of Technology (Sydney, Australia), after which she spent 5 years working for the Sydney Theatre Company in a number of communications and marketing roles. She left to join News Corporation's pay television start up, FOXTEL where she spent 3 years, again in a number of corporate communications and publicity roles. In 2000 she moved from Australia to the UK where she worked for the Australian Tourist Commission and the Brunswick Group before switching to the voluntary sector. With David Robinson, founder of the East London Charity Community Links, she founded the social change organisation We Are What We Do (www.wearewhatwedo.org) and led projects including the best selling book, Change the World for a Fiver and the anti plastic bag campaign, I'm not a plastic bag which she co-created with Anya Hindmarch. In 2009 she joined the Guardian backed climate change campaign, 10:10 (www.1010uk.org) as its founding director and left in 2011 to spend time with her new baby. She joined The Funding Network (www.thefundingnetwork.org.uk) in 2011 initially as a maternity cover for the Executive Director and then to lead on the global expansion of TFN's work. She is married with two children, Cara, 12 and Isaac, 3.